

Hearing that I needed open-heart surgery last year was the scariest news I've ever been given. When I met Dr. Colvin, my fears began to subside. Not only was he comforting during an otherwise frightening experience, but he said he can do my surgery as a minimally invasive procedure. I knew then I'd be in good hands, and it turns out I was in the best hands. I was very sad to hear about his passing because he was a great doctor and he did so much to help so many around the world. My thoughts and prayers are with his family.
